SUMMARY OF COMMENTS BY FELLOW STUDENTS

The three critics of Mr. Hitchcock seemed to have mixed feelings concerning him. They felt that he would make a good case officer. In addition, one critic said, "while a good field man, he could probably be happier and possibly more productive in an executive officer type job where he has some leeway in carrying out instructions or policies from above." Another one stated that he felt he was best suited for "some type of personnel work with emphasis on relationships with students; has the ability to be an excellent instructor."

One of the students had observed him in a supervisory capacity. He remarked that "he was quite efficient in his job--asked the opinion of others but made his own final decision."

It was in the area of interpersonal relations that his critics showed some ambivalence toward Mr. Hitchcock. On the one hand he was described as "quite friendly, mildly extroverted, good man to converse with, and willing to go along with the crowd." On the other hand he seems to be a somewhat impatient individual with strong opinions. Also, "he has the personality of a leader and is hard to control when he is not a leader. In this sense, he will
